Dear Miss Giannakaris,

I am writing to you regarding the software development engineer position listed in Drexel University's Co-op program. This listing gained my interest because of the emphasis of creating real software products for a very large scale web application. After speaking with Parth Panchal, colleague of mine about his experience at Amazon I was further motivated to pursue this offer.

I have worked in the Philadelphia start-up space since my first year of university. Working on a start-up taught me how to think about real world problems and how to solve them. Working as the lead software developer for my start-up, I was able to think about the design of our software infrastructure and ensure we were capable of handling our growth goals. Having a true passion for thinking of new ideas and products I know Amazon's start-up cultured environment would be a great fit for my career.

As Hewett-Packard's(HP) Linux software engineer, I got the ability to work on sustaining software releases for their Linux ThinPro operating system. I worked with HP developers around the world to engineer the latest technologies in virtual PC commuting. In addition, I got the chance to talk to customers about their experience with our product and research improvements for future releases. I find Amazon to be a very unique, energetic, and innovative company based on news media and other public resources. Having worked in both start-ups and corporate worlds I believe Amazon is a work environment with best of both.

More detailed information about my education and experiences is included in the enclosed résumé. If I can provide you with any further information on my background and qualifications, please let me know.

I look forward to hearing from you, Thank you for your time and consideration.
Have a wonderful day,

Sunny V. Patel
